Lace dresses, one-offs

It's hard to find this little corner shop in the Born, especially as both the front and interior are all black, reminiscent of some dimly lit early 20th-century cabaret. The young Israeli-Catalan designer also dresses in black so you hardly see her amid her clothes racks. But it is well worth a visit for the long, flowing, body-hugging dresses that Tolstoy's or Chekhov's heroines might have worn. They are all enhanced with pieces of lace that Natalie finds in flea markets, takes apart, and then adds in as trim. This is incredibly refined work that attracts resourceful young Barcelonans in search of an original, one-off evening or wedding gown.

Nordic trends

Barcelona loves all things Scandinavian. And as Scandinavians love the sun, their shops are popping up all over the city. In the Gracià neighborhood there is even a Barcelona Reykjavik—an authentic Scandinavian bakery selling Nordic bread, sandwiches, and pastries (Doctor Dou, 12; map 2, D3; tel: 93 302 09 21). Here in this trendy little street lined with architect's firms, distinctive designers, and vintage decorator galleries, Snö proposes collections of Finnish, Swedish, Norwegian, and Danish clothes in a decor of aged wood, industrial-style ceilings, and varnished concrete floors. The accent is on basics and jeans for men, women, and children, not forgetting a range of design objects: Filippa K, Acne Jeans, David&Martin, Cheap Monday, Merde, and the inevitable big design names like Brio and Iittala. Another Nordic-style shop also in the Born district is Acopenhagen, Ribera, 8; map 2, H6; metro: Barceloneta; tel: 93 295 66 88; www.acopenhagen.com
